Senate Health and Human Services Committee
Senate Bill 790 by Miles
Testimony of the Texas Women's Healthcare Coalition
Janet Realini, MD, MPH
March 8, 2017

Thank you for this opportunity to provide testimony today in support of Senate Bill 790 by Senator Boris Miles. The Texas Women's Healthcare Coalition (TWHC) and its 67 healthcare, faith, and community-based member organizations are dedicated to improving the health and well-being of Texas women, babies, and families by ensuring access to preventive healthcare for all Texas women. Access to preventive and preconception care—including health screenings and contraception—means healthy, planned pregnancies and early detection of cancers and other treatable conditions.

Preserving the Women's Health Advisory Committee (WHAC) will allow this committee to continue its important work guiding the development of the state's new women's health programs, Healthy Texas Women (HTW) and the Family Planning (FP) Program. These programs serve as the primary state-funded safety net for low-income women in need of essential preventive services such as well-woman exams, cancer screenings, and contraception. Access to preventive healthcare is critically important to the health and well-being of women and babies, and to the fiscal health of our state. As our state seeks strategies to combat high maternal mortality rates and the threat of Zika transmission, the need for these services has never been greater.

Texas' women's health programs underwent consolidation and significant restructuring as a result of Sunset recommendations of the 84th Legislature. Prior to the programs' launch, HHSC had important decisions to make regarding key program components, including covered benefits, cost reimbursement structure, and program rules. Each of these decisions will impact the hundreds of thousands of women receiving services through HTW and the Family Planning Program. The WHAC has served as an important body for guiding decision-making about program design, sharing information with the public, and providing a forum for stakeholders to weigh in on the programs' development.

Much of the effectiveness of the WHAC has been due to the expertise of its membership. The members of the WHAC represent a wide range of women's health providers, including Federally Qualified Health Centers (FQHCs), obstetricians and gynecologists, Title X providers, hospitals, and specialized family planning clinics. Due to this broad provider representation, the WHAC's recommendations have been based on members' on-the-ground experience with women's health programs in Texas. This experience will continue to enable WHAC members to recommend administrative and programmatic changes designed to maximize access to care.

WHAC meetings have also played an important role for the general public, allowing stakeholders to receive program updates from HHSC. These meetings have provided information on issues including provider enrollment, benefits packages, and rule changes. Public comment periods have been an opportunity for stakeholders to make recommendations, seek clarification on program components, and raise issues they have experienced with the rollout of the programs.

The need for the WHAC will be just as acute in 2018 and 2019. Though HTW and the Family Planning Program officially launched in July of 2016, the programs are still in their early developmental stage. Several providers are still rolling out their programs and services, and all providers in the state are still adjusting to the programs' new components. The WHAC provides an essential public forum for working through the challenges of the programs, as well as for identifying ways to improve their effectiveness and reach. The need in the state is substantial, with nearly 1.8 million women in need of state-supported preventive health services.¹ The next biennium will be a critical time for monitoring and improving our state's women's health programs to ensure they are meeting the needs of vulnerable Texas women.

Due to the relatively recent launch of HTW and the FP Program, the state has limited data on the number of women being reached, the impact of new benefits packages, and the average cost per client. Continuing the WHAC will enable the state to maintain an important forum for monitoring the growth of the state's women's health programs and confronting any barriers to women's healthcare access.

The TWHC thanks the Senate Health and Human Services Committee for its ongoing commitment to the health and wellbeing of women and families in Texas. Your support for SB 790 will help ensure the success of the state's women's health programs, leading to improved outcomes for women, babies, and families across the state.

Thank you for your consideration. If you have any questions or if we can provide further information, please contact me at (210) 223-4589 or email me at JRealini@hf-tx.org.
